

~~SECRET~~

~~EYES ONLY~~

17 December 1954

MEMO FOR THE RECORD OF THE CLARK COMMITTEE

25X1A

[REDACTED]

Colonel Miller seemed impressed with the layout of Area B (visited in the morning) and the type of training, research and development engaged in. He is a convert to intelligence of this nature, and is a "gadgeteer" who is immediately drawn to anything mechanical or functional.

Area A, however, impressed both McGruder and Miller as unrealistic. They both felt that such advanced thinking and planning was essential and elementary, but looked upon the concept of the operation itself as wholly impractical and improbable. First, they couldn't see how any of the chosen occupants of the disaster area would, at a moment's notice, forsake their relatives and families and flee for the hills, and that as a result the "chosen" would (if at all) dribble in over an extended period of time. Also, they felt that, if any, very few of the "chosen" would be in a position to make the trip, due to all being suddenly dead. They wondered why more alternates had not been chosen to replace the empty shoes. Colonel Miller felt that the number of records maintained, in comparison with the mass of records he has been exposed to to date within the Agency, are far too few to be able to carry on the Agency's mission. He wondered how current they were, how they duplicated other archives, and whether or not anyone had been delegated to keep a continuing survey of the material sent and recorded. Although his questions were very adequately answered, he didn't appear to be convinced in his own mind that the idea was practical or well enough thought through.

25X1A

[REDACTED]

25X1A

FLD/c cc:

Inspector General

~~SECRET~~

~~EYES ONLY~~

010148

17 December 1954

MEMO FOR THE RECORD OF THE CLARK COMMITTEE

Areas A and B. [REDACTED]

Colonel Miller seemed impressed with the layout of Area B (visited in the morning) and the type of training, research and development engaged in. He is a convert to intelligence of this nature, and is a "gadgeteer" who is immediately drawn to anything mechanical or functional.

Area A, however, impressed both McGruder and Miller as unrealistic. They both felt that such advanced thinking and planning was essential and elementary, but looked upon the concept of the operation itself as wholly impractical and improbable. First, they couldn't see how any of the chosen occupants of the disaster area would, at a moment's notice, forsake their relatives and families and flee for the hills, and that as a result the "chosen" would (if at all) dribble in over an extended period of time. Also, they felt that, if any, very few of the "chosen" would be in a position to make the trip, due to all being suddenly dead. They wondered why more alternates had not been chosen to replace the empty shoes. Colonel Miller felt that the number of records maintained, in comparison with the mass of records he has been exposed to to date within the Agency, are far too few to be able to carry on the Agency's mission. He wondered how current they were, how they duplicated other archives, and whether or not anyone had been delegated to keep a continuing survey of the material sent and recorded. Although his questions were very adequately answered, he didn't appear to be convinced in his own mind that the idea was practical or well enough thought through.

cc: [REDACTED]

Inspector General

This document has been approved for release through the HISTORICAL REVIEW PROGRAM of the Central Intelligence Agency.

Date 5/5/92

HRP

Approved For Release 2000/09/14 : CIA-RDP88-00374R000100260027-3

~~SECRET~~

~~EXCLUDED ONLY~~

010148